or beams of the English, and the strong varieties beams under the hearth (where of course they should not have been got on fire; notice was sent to the proper quarter, and two men came, one with buckets, the other with a huge syringe upon his shoulder, which he discharged a few times through the cracks, and all was right. I never could hear of any other fire engine in Florence, and I do not believe the loss by fire is a hundred dollars per year there.

I had almost forgotten Raffaelle and Michel Angelo, and the magnificent galleries of statuary and paintings; but you have other matters to think of you have Mexicans to thrash, Loco-Focos to thrash.

paintings; but you have other matters to think of you have Mexicans to thrash. Loco-Focos to thrash. Domestic Industry to protect; what care you at home for works of this ornamental nature, when bellies are to filled with reast beef, and works of brick or mortar usefulness attended to; is there not more in one old mortgage than in all the old masters?

But Raffaelle's frescoes in the Vatican are beautiful, and almost alive. The School of Athens lacks little of being the finest picture I have seen, even in color, its least excellence it has a superb general effect, and wants only true imitation in the individual parts. The Helidoras Drivenout of the Temple,' and the Incondio del Borgo (fire in the suburb) are unrivaled and unapproached—mothing I have seen can compare with them for dramatic effect and truth of shape. Had Raffaelle superadded to his own the powers of Paul Veronese, of painting truly whatever was before him, and dealing with his hues as a musical composer deals with his sounds, he could have defied all rivalry until civilization is far more advanced; as it is, he is the painter whom we turn to again said again, when even Titian fails to excite. But Titian's excellence lay chiefly in his coloring, which is now obscured by the dirt of three centaries, and yet retains an unequaled power of pleasing. Raffaelle's excellence is unaffected by dirt, and his pictures are now as pleasing as ever. I think I shall copy the three pictures I have named. The more I see for the galleries here in Europe, the more I see for the galleries here in Europe, the more I am persuaded that if once the Americans would take hold in the right way, they would find themselves abundantly rewarded for the outlay of an amount larger than I dare name for a correct-cans would take hold in the right way, they would find themselves abundantly rewarded for the outlay of an amount larger than I dare name for a corrected system of public galleries in the principal cities. If I owned all the land in New York I could for a long time to come expend half a million a year on a Museum of the Arts and Sciences, in which the Fine Arts should hold the first place. I am sure it would increase rents to a much greater amount. People would improve in taste, and a city so embellished would attract thousands who now shun the unpolished and indecent aspect of it. If some one now could be found, whose countaisseurship was undoubted, whose probity was not assailable even by discontented rivals, and whose business talents were great, such a man might unite and lead the friends of the Arts and Sciences and of learning generally, and a great and glorious result might be hoped for: but committees of men who are not thus qualified have not influence sufficient to produce qualified have not influence sufficient to produce even a momentary cuthusiasm, much less a steady and continued progress. The right man should be looked for with lanterns. Yours truly. J. K.F.

A letter received in this town, from Captain Hillman of the bark Smyrna belonging to New-Bedford, and dated Callao, May 28, 136, after saying that six of his men were matinous, and only prevented from committing crime by the constant watch that was kept over them by his officers, who were armed with pistols and authorized to shoot them down if they would not do their duty, states that on the 10th of May, at 2 o'clock. A. M. Mayhew Look, who had charge of the watch, discovered the ship to be on fire forward in the hold, but that atter great exertions the flames were extinguished. The fire was set by two Englismen and a negro. The ship proceeded to Callao, and the mutineers were confined in Callao Castle. The other three refractory sallors were discharged from the ship, but nothing could be proved against them. Captain fi intended to leave Callao the next day. (the 29th). Amount of oil not stated.
